As we approach World Population Day, it is crucial to acknowledge the profound impact of demographic shifts on global economic dynamics. To commemorate this significant day, our department will be organizing a series of discussions, presentations, and workshops on 11/07/2022. The focus will be on understanding the intricate relationship between population trends and economic development, exploring how these factors intersect and influence various aspects of economic policies, labor markets, resource allocation, and consumer behaviour. We invite all members of the department to join us in these sessions, contributing your perspectives, expertise, and insights to foster a deeper understanding of the correlation between population trends and economic paradigms.
